Anna North's America Pacifica is a grim, imaginative but ultimately sad novel set in a dystopian world in which the United States has been reduced to an island teeming with filth, waste and suffering. The past -- the happy American land of plenty we know -- is nothing but a tattered memory in the minds of the elderly.

Anna North: I love dystopian novels, though I had to declare a moratorium on them when I started writing America Pacifica, to make sure I wouldn't be overly influenced. The last one I read before I started writing was The Road , which I found really beautiful and chilling and sad, and I recently started letting myself read dystopias again ...
