Thus, as one reads the lines of this poem, the lesson becomes clear. The Lesson is about life and death. The speaker begins the poem by claiming that she has died already, more than once, and that she will keep on dying. She describes death and pain in such vivid detail that the readers can sympathize with her.

Analysis of The Lesson by Maya Angelou

The Lesson is set entirely in the Professor's apartment office, which is also a dining room, with a provincial buffet standing on the right. At center stage is a table that doubles as a desk. The window, upstage, is not very large, and through it the roofs of a small town can be seen in the distance.
