Somewhat related: With a few weeks of practice I managed to develop the skills to make a fire kit and actually make a fire with a hand drill. It was a bastard, and we barely pulled off the fire as part of the show, but again, it illustrates that although many of these skills are quite complex, a relative amateur can attain enough technique to pull this off in fairly demanding situations.

One way in which children typically learn about death early in life is through the death of an animal or a pet. A child is likely to come across a dead animal or insect at some point early in life maybe while out walking in the woods or the family's cat bringing home its prey or someone swatting an insect that has intruded on the family home.

In the social sciences, a social group can be defined as two or more people who interact with one another, share similar characteristics, and collectively have a sense of unity. Other theorists disagree however, and are wary of definitions which stress the importance of interdependence or objective similarity. Instead, researchers within the social identity tradition generally define it as "a ...
