An Expensive Education Nick McDonell

McDonell, Nick. AN EXPENSIVE EDUCATION. (2009). . This is the third book by this twenty-something author which has received generally good reviews. I didn't like it all that much. The author was praised for his Hemingway-styled prose. I thought it resembled the constructions in the Dick and Jane books.

An Expensive Education, by Nick McDonell. Now, at 25, having completed Harvard and taken assignments from Harper's and Time in Sudan and Iraq, McDonell offers up An Expensive Education, a political thriller that strives for the pulp seriousness of Graham Greene or John le Carré. Michael Teak is a 25-year-old Harvard graduate,...

An Expensive Education, by Nick McDonell - The Globe and Mail

An Expensive Education, about a young intelligence agent from Harvard, is nothing groundbreaking—for McDonell or the spy-novel genre—but it's smart and sexy and could be the beginning of a franchise more lucrative than literary fiction...blends a terse story of international intrigue with a biting satire of Harvard, from which McDonell ...
