Angel Elizabeth Taylor

In Angel, Elizabeth Taylor has created a rather repugnant, but absolutely fascinating character. Angel is rather unusual for an Elizabeth Taylor novel, in that it follows the life of the title character from the age of 15, when she decides that she is going to become a famous writer, to the end of her life.

Angel (New York Review Books Classics): Elizabeth Taylor ...

A girl with irrepressible imagination, Angel grows up to become a famous novelist who churns out bad novels that her reading public nonetheless loves (Elizabeth Taylor apparently modeled Angel's novels on those of Ethel M. Dell, who was a famous writers of romances in the early 20th century). Angel has an inflated sense of her own importance.

Angel by Elizabeth Taylor, Paperback | Barnes & Noble®

She kept herself very private, rather quiet. Angel, by contrast, is slapdash, writes about what she does not know and draws attention to herself with her letters written in violet ink. Despite these implied criticisms of Angel's behaviour and writing, Elizabeth Taylor's character evokes pity in the reader.
